IMPROVEMENT B, V & TH phonics

The "th" sound in words like "though" or "both" can be difficult for some English learners because it is not a common movement in their first language. The "b" and "v" sounds at the beginning of words can also be especially difficult for Koreans. Practice these letters and their sounds with the following tongue twister.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION Has anyone ever spoiled a movie or show for you?
누군가 영화나 드라마를 스포한 적이 있나요?

Last month, everyone at work was talking about the new season of a crime drama. I was three episodes behind, so I made one simple rule. No spoilers. I planned to watch the rest over the weekend, which meant I had to hold out for four more days. That was harder than I thought. The last episode had ended on a huge cliffhanger, and the whole internet wanted to talk about it. So I stayed off social media completely and muted every group chat. When my coworkers started discussing the show at lunch, I put in my earphones and tuned them out. One of them even shouted, "I can't believe the detective was—" and I ran out of the room before he could finish. I felt like a spy protecting top-secret information. By Friday night, I was proud of myself. I had made it. I was finally on the couch, popcorn in hand, ready to press play. Then my mom walked in, looked at the screen, and said out of the blue, "Oh, this one! Isn't it crazy that the detective was the killer?" I just stared at her. Four days of hard work, gone in four seconds. She had given away the whole story without even blinking. "How do you even know that?" I asked. She smiled and said, "I watched the whole season last night." I still watched the rest, but honestly, it wasn't the same. Now I know the truth. You can hide from the internet, but you can't hide from your mom.
